Not illustrated. 1905 Excerpt: ...and dry, with slight variations of temperature during the entire year. It is never hot and never cold, frost being unknown, the temperature ranging between 65 F. and 75 F. during the year. Here are found ideal conditions of human life, perennial summer and sunshine, magnificent scenery, the purest of water drawn from the eternal snows of the loftiest mountains and Aolcanoes of the earth, perfect health conditions, no malaria, consumption, yellow fever, or other enemies to human life, hot mineral springs, unexcelled by the most famous ones of Europe and America for their health-giving properties, andan old, established, and polished civilization. The population numbers about 310,000 people, mostly the descendants of the best of the old Spanish race, there being but few descendants of the native and negro races. The area is about 22,000 square miles. So much in brief for the social side. The commercial side is not less inviting. The total imports of Costa Rica for the year 1903 were $4,889,659. Of this amount the United States imported $2,454,856 in value, the United Kingdom, $1,054,707, and Germany, $540,827. The relative percentage of increase of imports from the United States is gradual increasing. The principal exports from Costa Rica are coffee, bananas, sugar, beans, rice, and cacao. Besides, the forests abound in the finest of woods for finishing and furnishing purposes. Coffee and bananas are the great staple products. Coffee raising has long been regarded as the most profitable form of agriculture, and the Costa Rica coffee ranks high among the best coffee of commerce. The cultivation of bananas has increased during recent years. Twenty steamers are now engaged in the transportation of bananas between Port Limon, on the east coast, and New O...
